

Are You More Like: Mix and Match, Card Set 1

Created by Chris Cavert

This activity will get your groups moving and talking. It can be played with 12 to 40 participants (based on the number of cards in this set). Use this mix and match community builder at the beginning, middle or the end of any team building program – any time you get your people talking is a good time.

Preparations: Print off the pages in this set and laminate (optional for long-term use) before you cut out all the separate cards. Be sure to organize the paired, Are You More Like...? cards together before handing them out – you want to make sure each participant in your group will have a match to find when playing. (So, if there is an odd number of players, you get to jump into the fun.)

Directions: When you are ready to play, hand out a card to each participant in the group. Teach everyone (or remind them about) the blind shuffle – participants walk around exchanging cards with each other without seeing what is written on the cards. After about 10 seconds of shuffling you can call out, “Look at your card.” Everyone then proceeds to mingle around looking and reading the cards in the room to find his or her, Are You More Like...? question match. Everyone in the group must be matched up with a partner before any answering can begin – this is where a little team building can take place (and even some creativity).

Once everyone is matched, each pair (talking only to each other), shares answers to the question they’ve put together with their cards. Encourage everyone to go a bit deeper, if possible, and share why they think they are more like one characteristic than the other. If there is time, before the next shuffle, have pairs stay together and discover how many things they have in common with each other.

Give this paired process about 60 seconds, then call for another 10-second blind shuffle before looking at the cards again and matching up with someone new. Five or six rounds of Are You More Like: Mix and Match, from time-to-time, provides a nice opportunity for group members, who don’t normally talk with one another, to get to know each other a little more.
